

Abstract

Temporal Oscillations in owering of Passiflora Incarnata have been studied over a period of two years. Fourier transform of the temporal behaviour reveals a period of approximately thirty days. Effects to correlate the number of owers with change in temperature and humidity are described.