

Abstract

An elliptic curve is a non-singular cubic curve of genus one in two variables over a field K with points having coordinates in K together with a special point, point at infinity O . The rational points on singular cubic curves and on non-singular cubic curves behave differently. The set of rational points on a non-singular cubic curve is finitely generated but the group of rational points on singular curve is not finitely generated.